WELCOMING WORDS

Early intervention and prevention have visible returns. Health-promoting environments and behaviours in childhood have a major impact on health and satisfaction later in life. It is indisputable that unequal access to healthcare and education during early childhood leads to inequality in skills, accomplishments, health, and general success in adult life.

The Swiss Public Health Conference 2019 delves into these complex connections. On the basis of the lifetime perspective, experts discuss the current state of development in Switzerland and suggest potential solutions. However, data is often missing in order to be able to intervene in a targeted manner. For this reason, the gaps in Switzerland are examined and ongoing studies in other European countries are presented.

The digital transformation constitutes another challenge for the health sector and is also a topic at this conference. Digitalisation can be used for positive public healthcare interventions. However, media skills are necessary in order to effectively navigate the digital society. With this in mind, we will need to adapt the health strategies for the new generation and pursue new solutions.

We gladly present you with research results and practical experiences relating to this wide range of topics at our Swiss Public Health Conference 2019. Our aim is to point out gaps and potential for optimisation and to urge politicians and authorities to act. To conclude the conference, a joint manifesto on child and adolescent health will be adopted. This is based on our belief that the next generation should be given the best possible conditions for a good start in life.

SSPH+ SCIENCEFLASHTALK

A public health science competition of innovative digital natives

Chair: Nino Künzli, Director Swiss School of Public Health (SSPH+) and Deputy Director Swiss Tropical and Public Health Institute (Swiss TPH)

Background

The SSPH+ ScienceFlashTalk is the highlight of a new training for young scientists to

- foster interdisciplinary communication skills
- link science and society
- attract and entertain a broad audience with concise science told in a story

As a member of the audience, you will

- be part of the jury and vote for the presentation you like best
- discover what the future generation involved in public health sciences
- experience how research can be conveyed in an attractive way in just 3 minutes

Objectives

The aim of the SSPH+ ScienceFlashTalk is to

- demonstrate how science can be presented in an attractive way
- inform on research of young public health scientists in Switzerland
- experience sciencertainment
